

9th International Academic Teacher Training Course From October 29th to November 9th, 2018 in Munich, Germany

Application Deadline: May 1st, 2018

Background

Globalization in all parts of life has been rapidly accelerating which comprises the opportunity to benefit from comprehensive networks. This is true in particular for the health field, as there is still an unmet need for well-trained doctors and health professionals in many regions of the world. Capacity building for the health professions is a major challenge for all countries, particularly those with weak economies. Professionalization of medical education is a key factor for sustainable development of health care systems worldwide.

The medical faculty of LMU Munich has proven excellence in faculty development. The International Academic Teacher Training Course (ATTC) in Munich makes use of excellence in faculty development to support the development of globally applicable approaches in medical education. This activity has been carried out by the CIH^{LMU} and Institute for Medical Education and is embedded in a strong network with partner institutions that has existed for over 20 years.

Target Group

The workshop was designed to bring together staff in health professions education who want to improve their skills as an educator, and health educators with responsibility for the medical curriculum.

Teaching Methods

The course aims to initiate an active participatory learning process. It uses activating learning methods, key facts and concepts, which are addressed in interactive lectures. Practical skills contribute to a better understanding and the analysis of learning processes. Development of related competencies as for example intercultural skills and soft skills are supported by tutored small group discussions, group work, group presentations and expert sessions.

Learning content

In the course, the participants will:

- experience problem-based learning (PBL) as a participant and as a PBL tutor, create a problem (case) for PBL, review other problems (cases) for PBL
- improve their teaching in large and small groups, give feedback and receive feedback
- describe components of curriculum development, formulate learning objectives, create and evaluate written test items

The course is held in English. Fluency in English is absolutely necessary. We will conduct telephone interviews to assess the English language proficiency. Completion of the pre-course assignments before the arrival is mandatory.

Duration/ Certification

- 2 weeks (90 hours) – including weekend. Full-time attendance is required.
- Every participant receives a certificate of attendance upon successful completion of the whole course.
